Hospitality Human Resources Strategy

Introduction

The hospitality sector across the Middle East and North Africa continues to grow rapidly, driven by large-scale tourism investments, rising visitor expectations, and ambitious national development strategies. In such a competitive landscape, human resources has become a central pillar of organizational success. The quality of guest experience depends heavily on the skills, motivation, and stability of the workforce, making strategic human resources management essential for achieving excellence and sustaining growth.

The Hospitality Human Resources Strategy program provides a specialized and practice-focused framework that enables executives, team leaders, HR professionals, and operational managers to elevate their capabilities in workforce planning, talent development, performance management, and employee engagement. Designed for participants across hospitality, tourism, government sectors, financial services, telecommunications, project management, marketing, sales, and other industries, the program aligns with the needs of mid-level and advanced professionals seeking to shape high-performing teams.

This course equips participants with strategic tools for designing HR systems tailored to the hospitality environment—where service quality, operational consistency, and guest satisfaction are critical. Through analytical and practical learning, participants will learn how to define workforce requirements, assess performance standards, design training programs, foster service-oriented cultures, and address common workforce challenges in hospitality settings.
