Virtual Leadership in Marketing and Public Relations

Code: LM32 From: 21 - 25 September 2026 City: Tokyo (Japan) Fees: 5900 Pound

Introduction

The rapid digital transformation of the modern workplace has redefined how leadership is practiced—especially across marketing and public relations functions. In the Middle East and North Africa, leaders are now expected to manage remote teams, drive brand reputation online, and lead with agility and communication effectiveness in increasingly virtual environments.

This program is tailored for executives, department heads, team leaders, and professionals working across key sectors such as oil and gas, banking and finance, telecommunications, public administration, human resources, project management, and marketing. Whether you're at an early or advanced stage in your career, this course equips you with the tools to lead virtually while building strategic communication and marketing plans that align with your organization's goals.

Participants will gain hands-on knowledge on how to maintain high-performing virtual teams, execute impactful online campaigns, and protect and promote their institutional brand in today's fast-changing digital reality.
