Code: PR32 From: 7 - 11 June 2027 City: Casablanca (Morocco) Fees: 4200 Pound

Introduction

Public Relations: Media Crisis Communication has become one of the most critical challenges facing institutions in the modern era. Media crises can erupt suddenly and have an immediate impact on an organization's reputation, customer trust, and overall performance. In the digital age of traditional and social media, the speed of response and the precision of communication are decisive factors in containing crises and minimizing their damage.

This program is tailored for executives, team leaders, and specialists across government and private organizations in the Middle East and North Africa. It targets professionals at all career levels—from those seeking to build strong foundations in media communication, to mid- and senior-level leaders who require advanced tools to handle high-pressure situations effectively.

The practical value of this course lies in equipping participants with strategies and tools to build robust communication plans, engage effectively with the media during crises, and craft clear messages that protect organizational reputation and sustain long-term credibility.
