Code: HR32 From: 12 - 16 April 2027 City: Paris (France) Fees: 5200 Pound

Introduction

The Strategic Human Resource Management and Workforce Planning course focuses on how organizations can align their people strategy with business direction, operational needs, and future growth requirements. Human resource management is no longer limited to administrative processes. It now plays a central role in workforce readiness, talent decisions, capability development, succession planning, and organizational performance.

This course provides a practical and connected understanding of strategic human resource management and workforce planning. It starts with understanding the role of human resources in business strategy, then moves into workforce analysis, demand and supply forecasting, skills gap identification, talent planning, and the development of workforce plans that support organizational objectives.

The course is structured over five days in a logical sequence. It begins with the foundations of strategic human resource management, then moves into workforce analysis and planning, forecasting and gap assessment, talent and succession planning, and finally implementation, measurement, and continuous improvement. The content is aligned with the provided topic: Strategic Human Resource Management and Workforce Planning.

Conclusion

The Strategic Human Resource Management and Workforce Planning course provides a practical framework for connecting people strategy with business needs. It covers the main stages of workforce planning, starting with understanding the strategic role of human resources, then analyzing the current workforce, forecasting future needs, identifying gaps, and developing action plans that support performance and continuity.

The program follows a clear sequence. It begins with the foundations of strategic human resource management, then moves into workforce analysis and current state assessment. It then focuses on forecasting, gap analysis, talent planning, and succession. The final day addresses implementation, measurement, risk management, and continuous improvement.

By the end of the course, participants will have a practical understanding of how to move workforce planning from a reactive staffing activity to a structured strategic process. The course helps improve workforce readiness, reduce skill gaps, support leadership continuity, and strengthen the organization's ability to align people, roles, and capabilities with future business requirements.
